

Trauma isn't linear.

For trauma survivors, processing and organizing memories can be difficult.

Sharing them even more so.

Bloom is designed to be anonymous, secure, and flexible.

Letter, Dear Boo, From LBG

Bisexual, Queer, Filipina, Woman, Middle age. Living on the West Coast, USA. Born in the USA.

Dear Boo-ness,

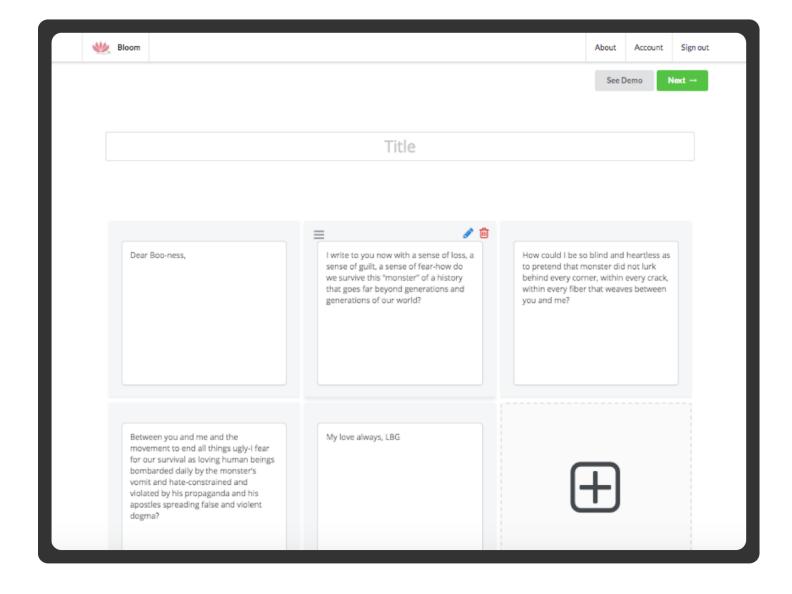

I write to you now with a sense of loss, a sense of guilt, a sense of fear-how do we survive this "monster" of a history that goes far beyond generations and generations of our world?

How could I be so blind and heartless as to pretend that monster did not furk behind every corner, within every crack, within every fiber that weaves between you and me?

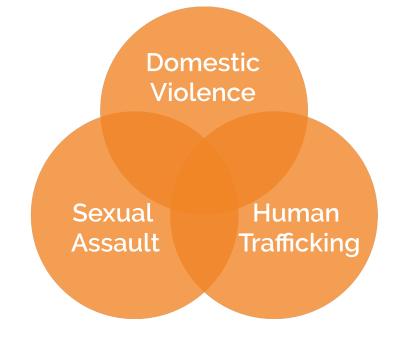

Between you and me and the movement to end all things ugly-I fear for our survival as loving human beings bombarded daily by the monster's vomit and hate constrained and violated by his propaganda and his apostles spreading false and violent dogma?

- Preview and publish finished story
- Delete story or account any time
- See stories from other survivors

Bloom empowers trauma survivors to tell their stories in a simple and supportive environment.

- Create and edit multiple stories
- Easily rearrange text and images
- Create anonymous accounts

Bloom is a collaboration with API Chaya, a Seattle nonprofit that serves survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, and human trafficking.